This program is intended for technicians who are looking to go beyond a basic understanding of gas furnaces. By understanding more about the way a system works, service technicians can be even better at diagnosing and fixing operation and performance issues.

Attendees of this program will also learn:

- troubleshooting techniques for 80 – 90% of the natural gas and LP furnaces in homes today;
- how to identify and correct no-heat situations related to ignition sequence timeline;
- how to service single-stage, two-state and variable-speed gas furnaces.

The program's instructor is Michael Prokup who educates leading HVAC contractors across the country through seminars, training programs, technical publications and marketing services as part of his company Prokup Media. Michael is a graduate of DeVry University and specializes in the development of HVAC-related training and technical publications.
